

September 13, 1989

Letter, John Foster Leich to George Kennan

Citation:

"Letter, John Foster Leich to George Kennan", September 13, 1989, Wilson Center Digital Archive, Private Papers of John Foster Leich, as obtained by Anna Mazurkiewicz and quoted in her forthcoming book Voice of the Silenced Peoples in the Global Cold War: The Assembly of Captive European Nations in the American Political Warfare, 1954-1972. <https://wilson-center-digital-archive.dvincitest.com/document/220109>

Summary:

After a brief meeting at the Council of Foreign Relations, Leich asks Kennan for notes on an article he is writing about the origins of the Free Europe Committee.

Original Language:

English

Contents:

Original Scan

RR #1, Box 70-B
Cornwall Bridge, CT 06754
September 13, 1989

Prof. George F. Kennan
School of Historical Studies
Institute for Advanced Study
Princeton, NJ 08540

Dear Prof. Kennan:

After our brief talk (in the wash-room!) at the Council on Foreign Relations last Monday about the origins of the Free Europe Committee, I thought you might be interested in the enclosed draft of an article I have been working on, dealing with the early days of my work with the national councils of political exiles from Central and Eastern Europe in the 1950's. It is an account of a small but I think in retrospect significant element in the United States' policy toward that part of the world in a very difficult period; and I do not know of any other study on precisely this topic.

I would be most grateful for any thoughts or criticism this effort might inspire, if you would be kind enough to write to me.

With many thanks and kind regards,

Sincerely yours,

John Foster Leich