Arrived in Beijing. Has [?] a "color." Along wide highways, the young with bicycles and the old with bicycles. In my view, Beijing, during my absence, has been built up even more. It no longer looks like a naked super-city-it is very pretty in the undergarment of pink [two words unclear] of green.

But this time we were not taken through the same road. And we were taken to the building of the All-Chinese Congress of People's Representatives, where a meeting would be held with PRC Chairman Yang Shangkun, not from the side of the Tiananmen Square (the front entrance), but from the back entrance. The reason: student demonstrations and strikes.

The most characteristic slogans: "The USSR has Gorbachev. And who do we have?," "Gorbachev! The people are here and not there!" Spoke to the Chairman. Then had a meal to music of a brass band in a giant rail-station size hall, and then the couple [Gorbachev and wife?] held an internal tea-drinking ceremony at the Embassy with talks and discussion by [Evgenii] Primakov, [Chingiz] Aitmatov, Kirill Lavrov and other, and other, and other intelligentsia.
